

A. READING

“My mom had to get a ride to the library to get what I have in my hand all the time. She reminds me of that a lot.” (Girl, age 14)

This morning when I read the comment above in a teen magazine, I felt a little bit strange. I realized that I had never heard of this habit of ours from a teenager. My peers and I are always complaining about the difficulty of getting information in our school years. Whenever we see teenagers -being too lazy to click and google things- around, we somehow can't help feeling jealous and angry. I mean, we used to go to a library to do any kind of school work. We stayed there for long hours and searched for some information in heavy and thick books. I'd like to point out that you haven't heard the half of it. We also had to get copies of all the pages we needed and pay for them. When we finally got out of the library, it used to be dark outside. As you can guess, we had great difficulty in carrying all those books and stuff until we got home. That's why we remind our kids of those days so often. I believe as they get older, they will appreciate what they have more.
